

The FCC sided with business interests in allowing the "big-grab" of little broadcast stations. This inevitably resulted in a dimming down of local content. The purpose of a broadcast license is to use the public airwaves to the public benefit. If people want one-size-fits-all radio, they can subscribe to Siri*s, or the other subscription radio service.

Let's return media to the public for the public- not to for profit conglomerates. Many of the local stations have become "repeater towers" as opposed to a radio station. I read recently that a town had an emergency evacuation order, but noone was at the local "Station" to broadcast it to the public- NOT GOOD.

Besides, the big media is just a government lapdog. Providing all the disinformation they can cram down your throat- YECH.
